

Select Auto Parts is a Milwaukee-based automotive recycling company committed to sustainability, accessibility, and community impact. The company provides affordable, high-quality recycled auto parts to repair shops and everyday drivers across Wisconsin, helping extend the life of vehicles while reducing waste. In addition to its recycling work, Select Auto Parts collaborates with organizations such as the Wisconsin Department of Workforce Development, Goodwill Industries, and Family Voices of Wisconsin to expand workforce opportunities and support families navigating disability and care needs.

A core part of Select Auto Parts' identity is its support for employees who are also family caregivers. As both a business owner and a caregiver herself, founder Natasha Broxton has created a workplace culture built on flexibility, understanding, and open communication. Employees are supported through adaptable scheduling, individualized guidance, and access to community resources that help them manage responsibilities such as caring for aging parents, adult children, siblings with disabilities, or family members with long-term medical needs. These practices have allowed team members to remain stable, engaged, and connected to their work during demanding caregiving seasons.

Select Auto Parts' approach reflects a simple belief: when employees are supported as people first, everyone thrives. The company integrates compassion, sustainability, and purpose into daily operations, demonstrating how small businesses can build strong teams, strong communities, and a meaningful impact by leading with intention and care.
